This picture depicts the horrors of war at Gallipoli. This could look like one of the blasts that hit in Shrapnel Gully. This was the Gully that Simpson and his donkey walked through every day with wounded soldiers.

Bombs come in many shapes and sizes. There are all different ways to fire them. Some can go in an artillery gun; some are dropped out of a plane. But there is one thing that bombs all share. They all cause death and destruction, which causes a lot of pain for the loved ones' heart when they find out that the person they love is dead.
