The Research Team

Research Questions and Objectives

Research Question: What resources can schools and communities develop to support two-way communication with bilingual learners and their families about schooling and school processes?

Research Objectives:

- improve information exchanges about teaching, learning and administration
- enable greater partnerships for supporting learning at school and at home, including with multicultural community organisations
- promote the capacity for informed decision-making by bilingual students and their families,
- demonstrate a commitment by schools to a culture of all members of the school community.

Why a multilingual glossary of school-based terms is important

- Growing culturally and linguistically diverse (CALD) enrolments in schools, especially in regional areas in five community languages: Arabic, English, Kurdish Kurmanji, Portuguese, and Swahili.
- A gap in the resources available to schools to communicate with newly-arrived students and families from CALD backgrounds
- Lists of key words can support communication, language learning and social connections.

The Research Process

Iterative cycles of the following:

- Stage 1: Corpus Analyses
- Stage 2: Collaborative evaluation and adjustment
- Stage 3: Redesign and refinement to completion

Design Stage 1: Corpus analyses

- Computer-assisted corpus analyses (RANGE program) were used to analyse publicly-facing school websites to identify and select key school-related terminology.
- A preliminary glossary was designed by researchers using the high-frequency words produced in the corpus analyses.
- The initial list of words was vast and included thousands of words.

Design Stage 2. Collaborative evaluation and adjustment

- The initial list was refined through a series of collaborative design meetings with participants: the Education advisory and reference groups, community leaders and families speaking Arabic, Kurdish Kurmanji, Portuguese and Swahili as L1.
- Resulting glossary translated into the four community languages; checked project participants.
- Simple definitions of terms developed in collaboration with Education participants in English and then translated and checked in the four community languages.

Design Stage 3: Redesign and refinement to completion

The multilingual glossary in the five languages 'redesigned' into an online, web-based format.

Features for access and usability:

- digital versions of the glossary in the five languages
- downloadable PDF versions of each language
- an audio version in Kurdish Kurmanji language
- a postcard with a QR code for ease of access in the community.

Multilingual Glossary of School-Based Terminology website

This website provides a multilingual glossary of school-based terminology in English and four key community languages: Arabic, Kurdish Kurmanji, Portuguese, and Swahili. These languages are the home languages of many recently-arrived families from culturally and linguistically diverse (CALD) backgrounds whose children are attending Queensland schools, and schools across Australia.

The multilingual glossary includes words and definitions in the five languages and is designed to promote two-way communication between school personnel and multilingual families. This website presents the multilingual glossary as well as an overview of the research study and the processes of developing the glossary. In addition, a list of online resources is provided which will be useful for the Queensland Department of Education, school systems, schools, and community organisations in their communication with multilingual students and their families.

Research outcomes include ...

1. The website with QR code and written and spoken functionality, downloadable PDFs for formatting into booklets for use in classrooms and school receptions.
2. Qualitative data from focus groups with multilingual families on points including challenges experienced in communicating with schools, the possible benefits of a multilingual glossary and how they will use it, and reflections on the process of participating in the research project.
3. A detailed description of the process of designing and developing a multilingual glossary for replication by other Education regions with different community languages.

Some findings of the project

- Multilingual parents care deeply about their children's education and need to be listened to when systems and schools make decisions about what is best for these children.
- Multilingual families face challenges in their communication with schools due to mutual language barriers and different cultural experiences and expectations of schooling.
- School leaders and teachers can implement strategies which support multilingual family engagement with schools. These strategies should focus on belonging, participation and two-way communication.
- Resources such as a multilingual glossary need to emphasise commonly-used terms and plain language definitions.

Where to next?

Widespread interest in translation to other fields

- Public health
- Domestic violence and the law
- Other languages in schools:
 - Dzonghka – the main language of Bhutan
 - Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander languages such as Yumplatok.

Thank you.
