

Curriculum into the classroom

A factsheet for publishers, book sellers and authors

Since January 2012, Queensland schools have progressively implemented the Australian Curriculum.

To support and guide their implementation of the Australian Curriculum, Queensland state schools have been provided with comprehensive, electronic curriculum planning and resource materials — the Curriculum into the Classroom (C2C) collection. C2C materials consist of whole-school and classroom planning documents that detail the knowledge, understanding and skills to be taught for each year level.

Classroom planning materials include lesson outlines that use extracts from sample print and electronic texts and link to online resources in order to model ways in which teachers might build student knowledge and understanding. These resources are included as examples only and their inclusion does not constitute a promotion or endorsement of their use by State Schools Division.

The C2C materials have been designed to provide teachers with a starting point for curriculum planning. Schools are provided with the flexibility to adopt or adapt the materials to suit the learning needs of their students and local contexts. The capacity for teachers to customise the C2C materials and to select the texts and resources that they will use to deliver the curriculum is vital — what is relevant, appropriate and will work in one classroom will not necessarily suit another. State Schools Division appreciates that publishers, booksellers and authors are keen to support teachers in their implementation of the Australian Curriculum by having quality Australian books available. The following frequently asked questions have been developed to inform publishers, booksellers and authors about the C2C materials and how they are intended to be used by schools.

Do the C2C materials contain a text list?

The scope of the C2C project does not extend to recommending or endorsing the products and services of external providers to schools.

While sample teaching episodes provided in lesson plans use extracts from print and electronic texts to model ways in which teachers might deliver the curriculum, teachers are not required to use them. Instead they are encouraged to personalise lesson plans and to use texts and resources that:

- are already available in their school's collection
- meet the learning needs and interests of their students
- align with the expectations of the current version of the Australian Curriculum.

The decision as to which texts and resources are best suited to support implementation of the Australian Curriculum and student learning is that of the individual school, in consultation with their community.

Curriculum into the classroom

If schools elect to build on their current text and resource collection they are able to seek advice from and communicate their requirements to suppliers and publishers.

Are the C2C materials available for publishers, booksellers and authors to preview?

No.

Can publishers, booksellers and authors have a login and password to access the Learning Place website and/or OneSchool?

No.

Can authors and publishers apply to have a particular text/s included in the C2C materials?

The C2C writers are responsible for selecting the texts and resources that they use in example learning sequences, in consultation with teachers. Requests from publishers and authors to include references to their products are declined to ensure that State Schools Division is not seen to be endorsing or promoting the products and services of particular suppliers.

Publishers and distributors have existing mechanisms in place to promote their books, authors and services to schools and they should continue using these.

Schools have been requesting copies of books which are now out-of-print. Can authors and publishers recommend substitutes?

Substitutes may be recommended to individual schools through the school librarian or principal.

Is information available to support schools' selection of literary texts and guide publishers and booksellers' suggestions to schools?

For advice on the selection of literary texts refer to the Australian Curriculum at www.australiancurriculum.edu.au. Before selecting texts to support teaching and learning, teachers are advised to consult the content descriptions for their Australian Curriculum learning area/subject and year level. Information about the specific knowledge, understanding and skills outlined in the content descriptions should be used to inform decisions about the appropriateness of texts and resources.

If you have a specific query relating to the C2C materials that has not been addressed in the following FAQs please write to C2Cfeedback@deta.qld.gov.au.
